

Equinian Physical Traits

Equinian horses are very different from Equestrian ponies. For instance, did you know that the term 'pony' in Equinia is actually an insult? Pony, to Equinians, means a horse that is small and easily walked over like stairs. The proper term for Equinians is simply 'horse'. In this segment, I am going to talk about the most obvious thing that separates Equinians from Equestrians, their appearance.

Their coat color is always dark brown, their eyes are always hazel, and their manes are always a solid black (except for when they grow old and it turns gray then white). Regardless of their striking similarities compared to Equestrians Equinians are able to tell the difference between one-another based on height, physique, mane styles, the shapes of their faces, their facial expressions, the shapes of their heads, the way they talk, voice pitches, and even how they carry themselves. Equinians don't have cutie marks. Equinians are bipedal, meaning they walk only on only their hind hooves. Equinians are all earth horses, meaning that there is no such thing as an Equinian pegasus, unicorn, or alicorn. Because of their isolation from Equestria, they are unaware that these types of equines even exist! But I'm getting ahead of myself. On to Equinians' last, and most disturbing trait. The biomes that Equinians live in have made them become adapt to eating local wildlife. You heard correct, Equinians are omnivores. The average Equinian is physically stronger than the average Equestrian because of their protein rich diet, but the average Equestrian has more energy because of their higher fruit, vegetable, and grain intake.